Ranchi: The 'Young Changemakers Programme (YCP)-Rural Immersion Bootcamp' conducted by Indian Institute of Management (IIM) Ranchi concluded on Sunday. The participants said that the three-day program helped them understand the problems of rural India in depth.

Around 95 high school students from Jharkhand, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Delhi, Hyderabad, Haryana, Gujarat, and Madhya Pradesh participated in the programme. The students visited Rasabeda, a tribal village and came up with solutions to problems faced by local people.

The team 'Bhagwati' comprising Niral Uprit, Risav Ganguly, Mahi Mathur, Himani Shah and Tanish Rajgarhia won the 'programme laureate certificate' for its innovative solution to villagers' problems.

Niral from New Digambar Public School, Indore, said, "I am taking back many values not only from villagers but also from the IIM director professor Deepak Srivastava."

Srivastava said YCP aims to sensitize the next generation of leaders to the problems faced by the economically underprivileged.

Chief guest and general manager, corporate social responsibility, central coalfields limited, Ladi Balakrishna, appreciated the YCP for representing this noble cause.
